

Scott's Success Stories

Lessons From The Champions

Like every budding student-athlete, Singapore Sports School alumnus Scott Ang Yiqiang had dreamt of representing Singapore.

However, having only finished 5th at the National Schools Swimming Championships in Primary School, Scott was not one of those whose potential stood out from young.

The triathlete does not give any excuses for poor performances and constantly set himself high goals and pushed himself to achieve them.

For example, in 2010, despite a multitude of activities on his plate, Scott set himself the goal of representing Singapore at the Singapore 2010 Youth Olympic Games, eventually meeting his target.

While many of his peers sacrificed their co-curricular activities to focus on their studies, the President's Scholar and Public Service Commission's Singapore Armed Forces Overseas Scholar knew what he wanted, and worked towards it.

Similarly, Scott had set himself a target of getting 45 points in his International Baccalaureate exams, despite also having to juggle his commitments as the President of his school's Student's Council.

These were just some lessons he shared with his juniors as he returned to his alma mater on 9 January 2017 as part of the Lessons From The Champions Series.

Despite needing to juggle his various sporting and academic commitments, Scott emphasised the importance of refusing to settle for less as a key driver in shaping his character.

Apart from his views on goal setting, Scott also regaled the audience with anecdotes of his time in Sports School, a time he described as "one of the most fun times" of his life.
